
The composite gain from valve command to head motion is an operating point — it changes with load, configuration, and fluid state — and it is exactly what the learned actuator models must capture.